The Intelligence led Policing Solution

What is Intelligence Led Policing? At its core, ILP is the process of preventing and detecting crime, rather than simply reacting to it. It is proactive. It involves an all crimes approach to sharing information between and among the various specialized units in an agency.

The business issues...

Intelligence is created from information, and information from data. Much of this data is stored in a variety of databases; many of them are outdated and hard to work with. Some agencies need to search through more than 40 different systems to look for suspicious patterns or clues. Disparate systems, laws, tools, and processes make it difficult to connect criminal activity.

Law enforcement officials want to concentrate on investigations and other police work, not learning to be IT experts. But the problem continues to grow. More data equals more systems to look through. RMS's (i.e. incidents, traffic citations, and calls for service) are usually housed in different databases. Drawing connections between them is difficult now, and gets harder as the volume of data grows.

...and Eagle's Solution
